Where were the prison doctors and other healthcare professionals when the torture occurred at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo Bay?

How does medical complicity with torture affect survivors of torture living in the United States?

How do medical societies respond to colleagues who abet torture?

Survivors of Torture, International invites health professionals and students to an evening discussion with Dr. Steven Miles, author of Oath Betrayed, as he explores questions about medical complicity in torture—especially during times of war.

Steven Miles, MD is a professor of medicine at the University of Minnesota’s Medical School and serves on the faculty of the Center for Bioethics. His international career spans 25 years, including serving as the chief medical officer for a Cambodian refugee camp. He chairs the research committee of the Center for Victims of Torture in Minnesota.

He has published more than 100 peer reviewed articles and three books on bioethics, health care reform, geriatrics, medical care in developing nations, and general medicine.

Dr. Miles writes in his introduction, “This is a work of medical ethics. I believe that the ‘Abu Ghraib abuses’ call on health professionals to affirm values and duties that lie at the core of what it means to be a healer.”
